Michal Lasona, michal.lasona at dbj.czCastro, along with Nelson Mandela and President Hugo Chavez, kicked off a U.N. summit that is expected to attract dozens of heads of state to Cuba. The only U.S. leader on the agenda is Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, who is scheduled to speak Monday. A White House aide told The Associated Press that President Barack Obama was not invited and it's unclear whether the next administration will have a presence. Castro and Obama have had strained relations since the Republican president moved to roll back former President Fidel Castro's efforts to restore Cuba's economy and political freedoms. The U.S. embargo against the communist-run island remains in place. Cuba, which has maintained tight restrictions on the number of visitors to the island, will celebrate the 20th anniversary of the end of the Soviet-sponsored communist rule on March 10. Castro spent Tuesday trying to dispel suggestions that he might relinquish power in 2014. Speaking to thousands of Cubans in Havana on Tuesday, the 89-year-old leader attacked U.S. policies and dismissed reports that he would soon step aside. Castro said he would be around until 2020, but suggested that he was not going to hold on to power forever. "At this stage I feel that I am better than others," he said. "I am more prepared. But as I said, I do not plan to rule Cuba forever." Castro also suggested he was not seeking to put his niece, Mariela Castro, in power. "Mariela was the sister of my brother and that's it. I want her to have the time and space to carry out her own work and I know she has what it takes to do it well," he said. Cuba has not had a vice president since 1959, when the late leader Raúl Castro, Fidel's
